The Occupation of Vojvodina (now a Province in modern Serbia) from 1941 to 1944 was carried out by Nazi Germany and its client states puppet regimes: Horthys Hungary, the Independent State of Croatia, and what was known as Nedics Serbia. In 1941, during World War II, Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy and Hungary invaded and occupied the Kingdom of Yugoslavia. The Vojvodina region was divided into three occupation zones: Banat was part of Nedics Serbia and under effective German control on account of its large ethnic German population Ba ka was re-attached to Horthys Hungary to which it had belonged until 1918 and the part of eastern Syrmia which hadnt been included in the Croatian Banovina defined in August 1939 was similarly re-integrated into Croatia, then part of the Independent State of Croatia which also included Bosnia-Herzegovina. The occupation lasted until 1944, when the region came under control of the Soviet Red Army and Yugoslav partisans.
